Berkeley in Saxon times minted coins and in C15th was a thriving inland port for coal and salt barges. The town itself, on a hillock dominated by the huge Norman Berkeley Castle (open to the public), was often surrounded by water when the River Severn broke its banks. Flood barriers were built in the 1900's to stop this.

Berkeley town has changed little over 3 centuries, most buildings being built before 1840. Dr Edward Jenner's Museum (his Chantry House) displays his work as the pioneer of the vaccination procedure.
